

October 31, 2025: On the Childish Attention Seeking of Trump's Team

I am waking up and have just finished reading about 1/3 of the news today and have stopped to record the desperate efforts of the Trump spy team to engage with my life in a negative way.

I am experiencing a dramatic rise in the acoustic bombardment in a manner that is synchronized to align with reading of Trump stories, the power of the troops, and anything else Trump related - even as I write this message now.

As I mentioned last week, the 'vibe' that I am receiving from Donald's spying team is that they are increasingly desperate to 'force' a 'change' from their existing position.

I am distinctly receiving a message of desperation and need for attention from this team and am recording this both as a message to anyone that can read these messages - but also as a factual documentation of the level of activity that we are now experiencing around our home.

'Powerful' cars and trucks circle our home on a regular basis. I have been awake less than 30 minutes and I am estimating at least ten (now 11) vehicles have passed our small house in the middle of an otherwise very quiet city block.

I have estimated this to exceed 100 cars a day by the time the day ends. For 10 cars or more to pass in 30 minutes, that would equal 20 cars an hour, times 12 hours of waking time which would amount to 240 vehicles today. By sampling this morning, this would roughly be 2.4 times the level of previous activity.

I am not exaggerating. The acoustic intrusions into our home are regular, precisely-timed to coincide with my work, and are absolutely intended to cause the effect of having a constant presence in our home by the machine noises of Donald Trump's political team - managed and brought to life by the technological team of Elon Musk.
